Nile Johnson, House Beautiful Advisory Board Member & African-American top 20 Interior Designer, multi-award-winning Interior Design Principal of Nile Johnson Interior Design based in Kennett Square, PA, member of the Black Artists + Designers Guild (BADG)

Why is diversity in design an issue that the industry needs to embrace?

There are many talents in our industry, and they don't all originate in or from one specific group. Interior Design should encompass, inspire, enlighten, and embrace, amongst other things. You get so much more out of the creative process when you allow yourself to be exposed and influenced by more than one perspective.

How do you incorporate your own background, history and heritage into your own design work?

My entire creative process's influence is through allowing myself to be open to other thoughts, ideas, and concepts. In my own home, nothing is off-limits for consideration. I want my space to reflect the world in which my daughters live.

In working with my clients, their preferences are used through my filter to interpret the designed space. My experiences have shaped my filter. Based on who I am, I imagine that there are pieces of my background, history, and heritage that naturally flow through my work.

About Nile's Design:

My overall design philosophy is "approachable luxury." A space you'd be proud to show-off, and not scared to use. Inspired by shelter-in-place orders, this media room is taking "Netflix & Chill" to the next level. The space needed to be as enjoyable as what was happening on the screen. If just for one moment, I can be a force for beauty, and transport my clients away from some of the ugliness in the world, then I've done my job.
